ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

First of all I would like to say thanks to Allah Almighty for giving me chance for higher studies despite financial constraints in my life. I express my utmost gratitude to my supervisor Dr. Ayaz Afsar who really guided me in a best way despite his busy schedule. I feel myself among the luckiest ones who have been supervised by Dr. Ayaz. I was the most confused student in class in terms of understanding research but he is one of teachers who really know how to show a way to a student when there is frustration all around in research work. I just want to say thank you so much sir for taking me under your supervision, for guidance and bearing my illogical questions.

Furthermore, I would like to say special thanks to Higher Education Commission for selecting me in PhD indigenous Scholarship in a critical time when I was about to leave the MS program owing to financial constraints. I do acknowledge if HEC had not sponsored me, I would have left studies so far.

I am, indeed, indebted to all my teachers: Dr. Munawar Iqbal , Dr, Safeer Awan, Dr, Hafiz Abid Masood, Dr. Ahsan Rehman, above all , Dr. Ayaz Afsar whose guidance has given me deep insight and knowledge during course work for research . I convey my sincere appreciation and regard to Dr. Muhammad Sheeraz and Mr.Taj Nabi for their valuable guidance. I also appreciate the cooperation of coordinator ELC Yasir sab, Baba Aziz and my dear fellows “the entire MS English class Fall 12” especially Hussain Khan who was CR of our class for helping me coping with accommodation problem being faced by me when I arrived in Islamabad first time and even had not a place to live. Special thanks to Abdul Hafeez for helping me during course work. Hafiz Naveed for his suggestions, above all Azad Rehman for helping me in proof reading of research proposal. I am grateful to my family especially Amma je, my abu, my elder sister, elder brother Khan bhai, Hayat and Ibraheem for their moral support. Despite lots of troubles I was allowed by my family for further studies which is really a great sacrifice on their part for me. I feel pleasure to say thanks to my dear friends Mr. Ali, Wazir, Habib and Naeem Bhai for their financial help whenever I was in need; they really helped me like a sibling during course of my studies.

I again wish my particular thanks to my teacher Dr. Munawar Iqbal, Dean of faculty languages and literature for his support in extension of the date of submission of fee in second semester and financial assistance when I was not HEC scholar in second semester and was facing financial problems.

DECLARATION

I, Muhammad Hussain, registration No. 249-FLL/MSENG/F-12, a student of MS in English at international Islamic University, do hereby solemnly declare that the thesis entitled, "Phrasal Verbs in Context with Reference to Cyril Almeida's Selected Feature Articles in the Daily Dawn: A Corpus Based Approach", submitted by me in partial fulfillment for the degree of Masters of Philosophy in English , is my original work , except acknowledgment and cited works in the thesis, and has not been submitted or published earlier and shall not be submitted in future for obtaining any degree from this or in any other university.

ABSTRACT

This study investigates phrasal verbs in context with reference to Cyril Almeida's selected feature articles to find out recurrent patterns, the use of the most frequent phrasal verbs by the columnist in his articles and to analyze the importance of context in learning phrasal verbs. Learning phrasal verbs in isolation, without providing context, is problematic for learners/students especially in the context of Pakistan. The aim of this study is to find out the most frequent phrasal verbs in Almeida's feature articles (Daily Dawn) in order to identify, discuss and suggest learning of phrasal verbs in context which may be useful for students as well as for teachers in learning-teaching process. The study has been carried out by close reading; identifying, classifying and suggesting learning/teaching phrasal verbs in context. The results show that the columnist has used phrasal verbs frequently with particle 'up', 'out' and 'on'. It was further revealed that meaning of phrasal verbs found in one dictionary may not be the same in the others. Hence, contextual meanings are more important as learning phrasal verbs in context could be more productive for students rather than cramming over a list of phrasal verbs found in grammar books. Furthermore, it was found out that there is difference between contextual meanings and dictionary meanings of phrasal verbs. Therefore, phrasal verbs need to be learnt and taught through context for better comprehension.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

Phrasal verbs are used in written as well as in spoken English. They are known for their brevity, conciseness and multifunctional meanings. Furthermore, the extensive use of phrasal verbs in writings of everyday use, particularly newspapers and conversational English, has made phrasal verbs important for the students. Phrasal verbs play an important role in daily conversation while communicating to others. Due to replacement of particle, phrasal verbs change their meanings whereas verbs remain the same which causes confusion on the part of readers particularly students. Moreover, it is a difficult and censuring area because of their dual meaning i.e. literal and idiomatic meaning. Almost every reader/listener in general, particularly students face problems in comprehension of both, written and spoken in terms of phrasal verbs.

1.1 Phrasal verbs

Phrasal verbs usually contain a preposition or an adverb or both. While learning English, phrasal verbs are as important as other components of English Grammar. It has been observed that Phrasal verbs are very significant part of daily conversational English and the use of phrasal verbs in texts has created confusion for students because of their multi meanings among Pakistani Students. Pakistani and foreign learners become frustrated because of the dual meanings of phrasal verbs as Liao and Fukuya (2004) argue that native speakers, particularly Chinese learners avoid using English phrasal verbs in conversational and written English. Similarly students in Pakistan are given a list of phrasal verbs for cramming in order to learn them by heart which creates problem for students in academic career because a phrasal verb is made up of a verb and one, two or three particles which jointly make a single unit of meaning.

The particle can be an adverb, a preposition, or a word that can act as either an adverb or a preposition (Stephens, 2002). Due to the replacement of particle while verb remains the same causes confusion on the part of readers particularly students as Mortimer (1972) states that there are hundreds of two-part verbs in English language such as 'bring up', 'carry on' and 'put up' which are enough to understand when the meaning of the whole two-part of verb is equal to the meaning of the sum of its two parts. He further argues that in many cases knowing the meaning of the parts does not help us to know the meaning of the whole. Thus, it is difficult to understand the meaning of "bring up" when the meaning of 'bring' is added to the meaning of 'up' for instance; he brought up a point. Furthermore, one also cannot understand the meaning of "bring up" in the sentence: She brought up a family.

Additionally, different varieties in meanings of phrasal verbs have also created problems for learners as phrasal verbs have sometimes a link to the basic meaning of the verb and sometimes they don't create any link. They are formed with the help of particle word which can be a preposition and adverb. Learning phrasal verbs as whole is very important regardless of their composed formation i.e. verb + adverb and verb + Preposition. According to Cornell (1985), there are at least 700 phrasal verbs in everyday use in English as well as 3000 established phrasal verbs including hundreds of two-part verbs. It has been found that large numbers of phrasal verbs are idiomatic in nature, in the sense; their meanings cannot be drawn from the verb element.

Foreign students usually avoid using phrasal verbs owing to idiomatic meaning and duel meaning, as Cornell (1985) focuses on the semantic and collocational problems that arise with phrasal verbs but he overlooked the problem of structure. In addition to the above lines, according to the Collins Cobuild Dictionary of Phrasal Verbs (1995), Fraser (1976) and Akbari (2009) the English language consists of almost 48 particles to form phrasal verbs which have been shown in the table 1.1.

Table 1.1: English Particles Used to Form Phrasal Verbs

aback	about	above	across	after
against	ahead	along	among	apart
around	as	aside	at	away
back	before	behind	below	beneath between	beyond	by	down	for forth	forward	from	in	into
of	off	on	onto	out over	overboard	past	around	through to	together	towards	under	up
upon	with	without

And the following 38 verbs in Table 1.2 are commonly used to combine with different particles:

Table 1.2: Common English Verbs Used to Form Phrasal Verbs break	bring	call	cast	come	cut	do	fall	get	give go	hang	hold	keep	kick	knock	lay	lie	live	look make	move	pass	play	pull	push	Put	run	send	set

Fraser (1976) points out that some verbs can co-exist with only one particle, for example, book up, flag down, jack up, and jot down whereas other verbs can form a phrasal verb with approximately every particle for instance the verb 'get'. He further explains that according to syntactic features; one has even no basis to foretell which verbs can combine with which particle and which cannot. He finally argues that only non-stative verbs combine with a particle. However, stative verbs such as know, want, hear, hope, resemble never combine with a particle (hear out is an exception).

This study reveals that learning phrasal verbs in isolation is problematic for Pakistani learners until context is given to the students. The study is carried out in order to find out the phrasal verbs which have been used frequently in feature articles written by Cyril Almeida. It is found that learning/teaching phrasal verbs in context could be one of the best methods in order to comprehend phrasal verbs. Corpus software has been used to find out frequently used phrasal verbs with context.

1.2 Corpus Linguistics

Corpus is large collection of text in which a specific variety or use of language is analyzed which is converted to plain text in order to make the selected text machine readable so that one can do linguistic investigation. The word corpus has been taken from Latin language meaning body. The data usually very large, is investigated in soft form, the size could be approximately one to hundreds of millions words. Collections of texts were used in language study in middle ages when lists of words of particular texts were made. The Brown corpus of Standard English is considered as the first modern electronically readable corpus which consisted of one million words of American English Texts which was printed in 1961.

The second generation corpora also known as mega corpora which consist of 500.000 and 1 million words which have been used by many researchers in their research works whereas it was further modified when a corpus of texts on computer was collected in order to study language as well as making dictionaries. Collins Cobuild English Language Dictionary (1987) could access twenty million words with addition of new texts which was named and produced as Bank of English; however, further addition of data has converted the Bank of English (BoE) which had 320 million words. Another large corpus named as The British National Corpus was produced by Oxford University in 1991 to 1994 which contained 100 million words of British English. However, the corpus of contemporary American English was considered one of the large and balanced corpuses in American English from the year 1990 to 2008 which contained 385 millions of text with 20 millions words every year. The corpora are limited to subjects' field and terminology researches which has full text rather than samples as it can be used to identify terms which may have been used in text at any page. Not only it gives terms identification but it also points out conceptual and linguistics information. The historical corpora which are known as Helsinki corpus of English Texts were produced by the University of Helsinki. The corpus holds old, middle as well as texts from early modern English period which had 1.5 million words.

There are many types of corpora which are written or spoken language, large size of literary texts of one or many languages. The text could be one whole speech, newspaper and book as well. Different corpora are given below. The texts that do not belong to a single text type, subject, field or register are usually known as general corpora for instance British National Corpus is one of the examples. The texts that are selected from a particular subject area or dialect are usually known as sub language corpora. The translated texts into one or more languages are considered as parallel corpus which is an appealing area for researchers because of its provision of deep insight of the nature of translations. It is generally applied on similar texts of different languages as well as one can do analysis of different varieties of a single language. In similar circumstance of communication, language and varieties are compared in corpus. Consequently, keeping in mind large data, the corpus software for this study was chosen in order to identify phrasal verbs used in one year articles written by Cyril Almeida. The data was analyzed through AntConc corpus toolkit and in later stage; the data was analyzed through concordance tool which is one of the feature of AntConc software.

1.3 AntConc Corpus Toolkit Software

It is software which is used to analyze English text including Korean, Chinese, Japanese, and the language that is according to Unicode standard. It is also known as multi-platform and multi-purpose corpus analysis toolkit. Furthermore, it has a powerful concordance including word and key word frequency generator, tools for cluster and lexical analysis as well as a word distribution plot. It has also a choice for simple wildcard searchers, (Laurence, p.1). I used AntConc software in this study in order to find out the frequency of phrasal verbs in feature articles. Additionally, a central tool of concordance software was also used in order to find out the most frequent used phrasal verbs by columnist and contextual meanings of the target phrasal verbs were also pointed out.

Concordance is considered as central tool which is used in corpus analysis software that has a wide range of features which are used in corpus analysis by researchers. It is used to show that how target corpus is searched through search terms. These search terms could be words, phrases or substrings. Key words in context can also be pointed out through concordance. Researcher used concordance as a tool to find out the target phrasal verbs and found out the frequency as well as context of the required phrasal verbs.

Referring back to the topic of this thesis, it has been found that different similar studies have been conducted in order to exploring the area of phrasal verbs. This thesis deals with phrasal verbs in context with reference to Cyril Almeida's selected feature articles in Daily Dawn which is read in Pakistan as well as it has known status. The aim of the study is to seek for frequently used phrasal verbs in Almeida's feature articles in order to identify, discuss and suggest teaching of phrasal verbs in context which may be useful for teachers as well as students in teaching-learning process. Cyril Almeida is a famous columnist, reporter and assistant editor at Dawn Newspaper. His articles usually contain lots of phrasal verbs which make his writing different from other columnists.

1.4 Statement of the Problem

Comprehension and understanding of phrasal verbs is a difficult area which creates problems for students/learners of English Language. Moreover, students in Pakistan are asked to cram a specific list of phrasal verbs which is forgotten and causes lack of interest in their learning process. Due to replacement of particle, phrasal verbs change their meaning whereas verbs remain the same which causes confusion on the part of readers particularly students because students identify the meaning of phrasal verbs by verbs identification; however, the replacements of particles change the meanings of phrasal verbs. Therefore, a systematic study was needed in order to know the contextual meanings of phrasal verbs so that the problem faced by students in understanding phrasal verbs may be resolved.

1.5 Research Questions

- 1-What are frequently used particles in the selected articles of Cyril Almeida?
- 2-What are the most frequent verbs with frequently particles?
- 3-What the variations are between contextual and selected dictionaries' meanings?

1.6 Significance of the Study

This study may broaden the academic horizon of the students on account of phrasal verbs. It suggests that learning phrasal verbs in context may be helpful for the students in learning phrasal verbs. It may be valuable for educational institutions for selection and inclusion of the daily Dawn in terms of teaching/learning phrasal verbs which are frequently used in day to day life. It may also be helpful for the students particularly for those who read English newspaper articles in order to prepare the paper of current affairs for different competitive exams and preparing the most relevant phrasal verbs of daily life and would learn phrasal verbs more easily in context rather than cramming. It may give them new ideas for improving their reading and writing skills when they understand idiomatic expression especially phrasal verbs in their academic life.

1.7 Thesis Organization

Chapter first is on introduction of the study, background of the study, statement of the problem, scope and significance of the study. Chapter two is on literature review which describes the background of the study in which the researcher analyzed different thesis, books and articles of his research domain and brought evidence for this thesis and it is on research method, process of data collection, and source of data. Chapter Three is about data Analysis especially to analyze the selected articles in terms of phrasal verbs. Chapter four deals with conclusion, findings and recommendations and bibliography and appendixes were given at the end.

1.8 Justification of the Study

The researcher was interested in undertaking research on the topic regarding phrasal verbs because of its importance and pervasive use in written and conversational language of daily life. Moreover, learning phrasal verb is a difficult and censuring area because of dual meanings i.e. literal and idiomatic meaning. Almost every reader/listener in general, particularly students face problems in comprehension of both, written and spoken in term of phrasal verbs. It has been observed that students become frustrated when they can't comprehend the exact meaning of phrasal verbs. The complication that is faced by students in the use of phrasal verbs is that verbs remain same whereas particles keep on replacing. Students extract meaning of phrasal verbs according to verb identification whereas replacements of particles change meanings of phrasal verbs. These replacements of particles change the meaning of verbs which causes confusion for the students. The researcher selected 'Daily Newspaper' because a newspaper gives a complete context. An article has the nature of narrative and discusses a complete issue. Furthermore, a variety of issues are discussed on daily basis in newspapers which cover almost the entire walk of life and one can find varieties of phrasal verbs related everyday life in newspapers that is why researcher decided to take newspaper as the area of the study.

Dawn was selected because of its well known status and it is read particularly by students in Pakistan in order to prepare for the paper of current affairs which is conducted in competitive examination. They face problem while extracting the exact meaning of phrasal verbs when they try to read these articles as they are given a list of phrasal verbs at school and college level and even in the books of grammar to cram. As the study suggests that learning phrasal verbs in context can be more beneficial for students because meanings of phrasal verbs may vary from dictionary to dictionary. Online phrasal verb dictionary and online Cambridge dictionary were selected for this study in order to be acquainted with the difference between contextual and dictionary meanings as well as to know variations in meanings of phrasal verbs because learners particularly students use online dictionaries in order to understand meaning of any word nowadays because of rapid increase in the field of technology. Therefore, these two online dictionaries were selected so that researcher may know variation in meanings in dictionaries regarding phrasal verbs as well as to see the contextual meanings of phrasal verbs used by the columnist. Cyril Almeida's columns were specifically selected as a pattern for this research because doing a study on all columnists was beyond the approach of researcher because of time constraints. The columnist was selected because of frequent use of phrasal verbs.

1.9 Chapter Summary

This chapter introduces Phrasal verbs which have been investigated for the present study. It also introduces the corpus linguistics including its approach for the present study. It also shows statement of the problem, research questions, significance of the study, thesis organizations. Finally it gives justification of the study.

The following chapter gives overview of the previous general research on phrasal verbs. It also gives review of related corpus research, followed by research methodology.

CHAPTER 2

LITERATURE REVIEW

2.1 Definition of Phrasal Verb

Several researchers and linguists define phrasal verbs in different ways. Phrasal verbs are considered as single semantic unit that cannot be comprehended by individual meaning (Biber et al., p.403). Darwin and Gray (1999) define phrasal verbs “a verb + particle combination that functions as a single verb, both parts giving up meaning in order to form a new lexical item” (p. 65). Moreover, phrasal verbs are further defined by Quirk et al (1985); a phrasal verb as a multi-word verb that possesses either syntactic or semantic features to some degree and behaves as a single grammatical form.

According to Oxford Advanced Learner’s Dictionary (2010), a verb combined with an adverb or a preposition, or sometimes both, to give a new meaning, (p.1101). Longman Dictionary of Contemporary English (2005) defines phrasal verb as “a group of words that is used like a verb and consists of a verb with an adverb or preposition after it” (p.1232), likewise, Macmillan English Dictionary for Advanced Learners (2002) defines it as “a combination of words that is used like a verb and consists of a verb and an adverb or preposition” (p.1062). Online Cambridge Dictionary defines phrasal verbs as “a phrase that consists of a verb, a preposition or a adverb or both, the meaning of which is different from the meaning of its parts”

2.2 Origin and Development of Phrasal Verbs

Inseparable prefix words were used in old English; however, the phrasal verbs which are used in post modern era, are different from old English as one could find rare use of phrasal verbs in old time. Particles were added at the beginning of verbs in order to use them as phrasal verbs. One can compare those prefixed verbs to current phrasal verbs, for instance, modern verb ‘to burn’ to old English 'bærna' and 'to burn up' to old English Phrasal verbs to 'forbærman'. Phrasal verbs in past gave idiomatic meaning as it was difficult to extract the meaning even from root of the verbs. It was a rare case, when particles were used after verbs in old English.

Prefixed verbs were no more useful for the learners in Middle English as the pre verbal particles lost its productivity even in old English as few writers begin to write with post particle verbs. The development of phrasal verbs slowed down because of borrowing words from French Language as there was competition in semantic field. (Baugh and Cable 340, Fischer 386). There was shift in term of syntax in Middle English; however, phrasal verbs gained importance in fifteenth century. It was noted by Tanaba that 162 phrasal verbs were used in The Paston Letters as old English 'forbrecan' was shaped as "to break up". Moreover, Phrasal verbs were divided into three categories till late Middle English i.e. 1) Old English-style inseparable particle + verb (understand, overtake); 2) phrasal verbs including verb + separable particle (take up, write up); and 3) nominal compounds derived from the first two (outcry, write-off) (Fischer 386).

Additionally, Phrasal verbs gained more productivity in early modern English as they were used by William Shakespeare in his plays. A study was cited by Hiltunen of Castillo in which 5744 phrasal verbs were pointed out. It was further dig out that phrasal verbs were used abundantly in Early Modern English dramatic text because of their several meanings as well as productivity. It was noted by Akimoto (1999) that phrasal verbs were used more in dramas and letters rather than essays and academic writings. Inseparable prefix verbs were the basic form of phrasal verbs in Old English, however, separable forms were also there. Old English OV syntax was ignored by the Norman Conquest and Old Norse and this catalyzed the production of separable adverbial particles and phrasal verbs in Middle English. Phrasal verbs received more importance in dramas rather than formal text in Early Modern English and in present day English, Phrasal verbs are used in written as well as in conversational English. They are frequently known for their brevity, conciseness and multifunctional meanings. Furthermore, the extensive use of phrasal verbs in writings of everyday use, particularly newspapers and conversational English, has made it important for the students, at intermediate, upper intermediate and higher levels, to grasp.

2.3 Syntactic Features of Phrasal Verbs

Quirk et al, (1985) define that a phrasal verb is syntactically a lexical verb followed by morphologically invariable particle and functions as a single verb. As particles can be classified in three categories such as a) against, among, as, at, beside, for, from, into, on top, b) spatial adverbs such as aback, ahead, apart, aside, astray, away, back and c) prepositional adverbs such as about, above, across, after, down, in, off, out). Celce-Murcia and Larsen-Freeman (1999) dig out three major syntactic features of PVs as follows:

2.3.1 Phrasal Verbs that Require Prepositions

Specific preposition has been preferred by a number of phrasal verbs which should be considered as single unit. According to Quirk et al (1985) there are phrasal-prepositional verbs and recommended that “a common sign of idiomatic status ... is the existence of a one-word paraphrase” (p. 1160). The examples can be seen as put up with ‘tolerate’, look up to ‘admire’, and do away with ‘abolish’. The prepositions with, to, and with were added to put up, look up, and do away, resulting in more complex phrasal verbs.

2.3.2 Transitive and Intransitive Phrasal Verbs

Phrasal verbs can also be classified as transitive or intransitive as it is known to all that a transitive phrasal verb requires an object to convey a complete sense of sentence, for instance, she usually fills in the blanks in hurry. The Phrasal verb fills in precedes the object ‘the blanks’.

Whereas some phrasal verbs are intransitive as they do not need any object, without object, they can convey a complete sense, for example the plane took off. In this case, the phrasal verb took off does not take an object. According to Eastwood (1994), Intransitive verbs are used to explain that someone is doing something; the sense of sentence becomes complete without any object.

2.3.3 The Separability of Phrasal Verbs

The transitive phrasal verbs have a separate syntactic feature because direct object is put between the verb and particles which makes it separable phrasal verbs while in some places it is inseparable. However, the separation is obligatory when the direct object is a pronoun. To sum up, the grammatical pattern of PVs is like: “verb ± direct object ± adverb ± preposition” (Quirk et al., 1985, p.1161).

2.4 Phrasal verbs Complexity

L2 learners face problems while learning phrasal verbs as well as Pakistani English learners, however, even for those whose L1 has similarity to English. As Darwin and Gray (1999) points out that not only learners with non-Germanic native languages experience this difficulty with phrasal verbs, however, according to Dagut and Laufer (1985), Hulstijn and Marchena (1989), Dutch, English as a Second Language, learners also face confusion because they misunderstand or avoid English phrasal verbs although there are similar constructions in their native language.(p.66).

English as second Language learners face difficulty while learning phrasal verbs whether syntactic, semantic, or a combination, have been increased by the highly prolific nature of the phrasal verbs in English. Comprehension and understanding of phrasal verbs is a difficult area and create problems for students/learners of English Language. Moreover, students in Pakistan are asked to cram a specific list of phrasal verbs which is forgotten and causes lack of interest in their learning process. Due to replacement of particle, phrasal verbs change their meaning whereas verbs remain same which causes confusion on the part of readers particularly students, as the nature of phrasal verbs is considered as highly productive as Cornell, (1985) points out that although they were only used in speech and informal writing, nowadays, it is accepted that phrasal verbs can be found in all registers; comic books; street slang as well as most academic forms of the language.

According to Gaston (2004) the phrasal verbs are one of the mysterious structures in English for second language learners because there is not any difference in form between prepositions in prepositional verbs and particles in phrasal verbs. This similarity is shown in the example below: First, she ran into the house. (Verb + preposition). Second, she ran into him at the house. (Verb + particle): In first example she physically ran inside a house whereas in second example she was not running, nor did she make forceful physical contact with him. These two prepositions have the same form, but have very different functions. The first one is a preposition whereas the second one is a particle related to the idiomatic phrasal verb 'run into' means to meet unexpectedly.

Additionally, Side (1990) argues that Phrasal verbs cause great difficulty for learners because of their great quantity as well as the combination of verbs and particles which are completely haphazard as there are a confusing number of combinations of verbs and particle. Additionally, many phrasal verbs have multi meaning which does not appear to be the sum of two or three parts. The use of isolated phrasal verbs in course book without any proper context and by the way, teachers teach them which increase the confusion for the learners. The learners are asked to learn them by heart, implying that there isn't any systematic way of learning phrasal verbs.

"Learning phrasal verbs is an enduring source of difficulty for many Japanese learners of English. The confusion may be largely attributable to the fact that English lexicalizes orientation schemas differently from Japanese. That is, English encodes orientation spatial senses in particles whereas Japanese encodes these senses in the verb itself" (Yasuda, 2010, p. 251).

2.5 Semantic Features of Phrasal Verbs

Quirk et al (1985) points out that one can explain the meaning of phrasal verbs with one-word verbs. Phrasal verbs were divided into three main categories such as , first “free, non-idiomatic construction”, in which the individual meaning is understandable, second, “semi-idiomatic construction”, in which particles give aspectual meaning whereas verbs holds its meaning, and the third one is “highly-idiomatic construction”, where special meaning is given by joining verb and particles.

Furthermore, phrasal verbs can also be divided by semantic domain in term of their core meanings as most phrasal verbs have core meanings in only one domain; however, many of them have multiple meanings, especially activity verbs. Longman Grammar of Spoken and Written English (LGSWE) mentions seven common semantic domains of phrasal verbs (Longman Grammar of Spoken and Written English (cited by Martin, 2006, p.20).

- Activity intransitive, e.g. ~~get on~~, look out, move in.
- Activity transitive, e.g. bring in, fill in, get out of, keep up, pull up, pull down, make up, take in.
- Mental transitive, e.g. make out, find out, give up, look forward to.
- Communication transitive, e.g. bring up, call in, and come out with.
- Occurrence intransitive, e.g. break down, grow up, and set in.
- Aspectual intransitive, e.g. carry on, go ahead, hang on.
- Aspectual transitive, e.g. keep on, start off.

2.6 Relevant General Research

Phrasal verbs are considered as one of the important areas of English language. Phrasal verbs in English are considered as one kind of composition that is used frequently and constitutes the greatest difficulty for language learners. They have also been well-studied in modern linguistics since early days (Bolinger, 1971; Kolln & Funk, 1998; Jackendoff, 2002).

Many researches were carried out by different researchers on, why phrasal verbs are avoided by learners. The researchers in these studies also tried to find out how phrasal verbs are easy to comprehend if they are taught through context because learning phrasal verbs in isolation have been one of major cause of learner's avoidance. More attention was given to phrasal verbs as Cornell (1985) argues that in curriculum for English as a foreign language, phrasal verbs have been considered as important component because they are learned intensively by learners.

Celce-Murcia and Larson-Freeman (1983) argue that few non-Germanic languages have phrasal verbs which are difficult and complicated for them to learn. It was further asserted that it is almost difficult to speak and understand conversational English without having good knowledge regarding phrasal verbs.

A study was carried out by Dagut and Laufer (1985) in which the performance of Israeli students was investigated regarding phrasal verbs as the students were divided into three groups in order to take three different tests i.e. verb memorization test, a multiple choice test, and a verb translation test including three types of phrasal verbs (literal, figurative and compleative). It was revealed in the result that one-word verbs were used frequently rather than phrasal verbs. It was further pointed out that learners avoided using figurative phrasal verbs. Moreover, the researchers argued that avoidance at the end of Israeli learners was because of structural differences between L1 and L2.

Another study was conducted by Hulstijn and Marchena (1989) in which the Dutch learners were divided into two groups i.e. intermediate and advance level. The result revealed that neither Dutch learners avoided using phrasal verbs nor they faced any obstacle in their semantic and structural use. However, it was pointed out in result that Dutch learners avoided using those phrasal verbs which have bit similarities to Dutch language. The researcher concluded that not only difference but also similarities between L1 and L2 could also be one of the causes of avoidance among learners.

Side, (1990) proposes learners face problems while learning phrasal because of combination of verbs and particles randomly. It makes the learners confused when the verbs remain the same whereas particles keep on changing because of their multi meaning as figurative phrasal verbs create more problems for learners because of their idiomatic meanings. The use of phrasal verbs in course book is also problematic for learners as well as the teachers ask the learners to learn them by heart as there isn't any systematic way of learning phrasal verbs.

Laufer and Eliasson(1993) further investigated phrasal verbs in which two reasons were pointed out for avoidance of phrasal verbs: syntactic and lexical. It was revealed in result that avoidance occurs because of similarities, difference between L1 and L2 and due to complication in second language. The result further revealed that learners avoided using phrasal verbs whose first language does not have grammatical category like Hebrew. However, the learners whose first language has phrasal verbs like Swedish did not avoid using phrasal verbs. It was further dig out that avoidance did not occur because of any inherent complexity nor learners' avoidance reduced because of idiomatic meaning similarity between L1 and L2.

Few grammarians, as Kolln et al (1998) are in the point of view that phrasal verbs comprise only those combinations that form an idiom, i.e., a phrase whose meaning cannot be predicted from the meaning of parts.

Kaminska (2001) argues that Native speakers acquire phrasal verbs (literally or figuratively) at early stages, however, usually late by foreign learners because of the difficulty in grammar as well as it is difficult to deduce their meaning from the meanings of the separate words because of their idiomatic or figurative sense of meaning Furthermore, some phrasal verbs have a multitude of different meanings depending on the context. For instance, the American Heritage Dictionary cites seventeen different meanings of the phrasal verb 'pick up'.

Another study was carried out by Liao and Fukuya(2002) in which learners were selected from advance and intermediate level in order to find out the avoidance of Chinese learners regarding phrasal verbs including types; Literal and figurative as well as tests types; multiple-choice, translation and recall were used. They carried out the study in two stages in which multiple-choice questions were given to fifteen students first in order to know the avoidance of native speakers towards phrasal verbs usage over one-word verbs. The phrasal verbs literal and figurative were to be identified in which the researcher wanted to know how far semantic complexity caused an obstacle in learning or using phrasal verbs. The learners were divided into three independent groups of advance and three intermediate learners. One of the above mentioned three tests were taken by each of the six groups. It was revealed that intermediate learners whose L1 was lacking the structure of phrasal verbs used one-word verbs rather phrasal verbs. It was further pointed out in the result that less figurative phrasal verbs were produced in translation by advance learners whereas their focus was on literal phrasal verbs. The concluding result showed that the avoidance of phrasal verbs on the end of learners was because of interlangual development regardless of the L1 and L2 similarities and differences.

Hall (2002) classified Phrasal verbs in three ways: 1) to describe an action literally, for example: They usually go out went out of the village. The majority of phrasal verbs are used in this way, 2) To intensify or emphasize an action, for example: It's been pouring down all day.3) as verbs with a special meaning, for example: The child was run over while walking in the street. On the other hand, like normal verbs, phrasal verbs may be:

1. Transitive, as in: Mother looks after the children.
2. Intransitive as in: When we arrived, he got up.

Many studies have been carried out in which researcher studied about contextualizing phrasal verbs. Skufaki (2003, cited by Mansoor Ganji, p.2) investigated how far learners use conceptual metaphor in order to know the meaning of idiomatic phrasal verbs. In the study, meanings of unknown idiomatic phrasal verbs were hunched through context of sentences and the types of conceptual metaphors were described. The result revealed that conceptual metaphors were the strategy in order to comprehend the meaning of idiomatic phrasal verbs.

Phrasal verbs were further investigated when Rundell (2005, cited by Mansoor Ganji, p.2) carried out a research in which he the metaphorical meaning of a few phrasal verbs were investigated that many ideas could be developed as metaphorical alterations such as preside over indicate the meaning of being at higher position whereas skates over is used to hide the truth and swept over shows the powerful effect of someone's emotions. It was further concluded that more abstract notions of time are usually conceptualized in term of space.

Another study was carried out by Crutchley (2007) in which he selected learners of 6 to 11 years. Furthermore, picture selection tasks were adopted in order to test verb-particles construction. Result pointed out that semantic strategy may not be applied by children in order to learn phrasal verbs; however, they were made use of syntactic features of the verbs. The results further revealed that holistic approach was used by children in order to comprehend the meaning of unknown particles verbs rather than analytic approach.

Different computational studies have been carried out in order to take out unlisted phrasal verbs from large corpora or productive lexical rules are being constructed to create new cases (Villavicencio, 2003; Villavicencio, 2006). Other studies follow semantic regularities for example they studied about the particle 'up' whereas token identification of phrasal verbs is much less compared to the extraction, are described a regular expression based simple system.(Cook & Stevenson, 2006).

Schmitt and Siyanova (2007) further investigated on the study of phrasal verbs in which the researchers focused different aspects of phrasal verbs learning. It was investigated in the study the multi-word compared to one-word verbs in written as well as spoken English in term of L1. The researchers tried to find out how far second language environment affects the use of phrasal verb. The learners were divided into two groups of 56 students of each who were native and nonnative speakers. It was revealed in the result that nonnative speakers were less interested in using multi-words verbs compare to native speakers in informal spoken context. Moreover, second language environment did not affect the use of phrasal verbs. It was further shown in corpus analysis of the same verbs pair that one-word verbs are more frequently used in spoken and written discourse.

Another study regarding learning phrasal verbs in order to know how far working in pair or peer is useful for students in order to grasp the meaning of phrasal verbs rather than individual studies. The study was carried out by Nassaji, H. and Tian, J. (2010) in which two types of output tasks (reconstruction close tasks and reconstruction editing tasks) were investigated. It was found out in results that working in groups' collaboration was more useful than learning individually.

Kharitonova (2013) conducted a study in which his focus was to analyze lexical transfer, avoidance and influence of Norwegian and Russian languages influence on English learning. It was revealed in the study that Russian try to avoid using phrasal verbs whereas Norwegian don't. It was further pointed out that Norwegian try to use those English phrasal verbs which have some similarity to Norwegian.

No systematic corpus research has been conducted in Pakistan so far regarding phrasal verbs therefore a systematic study was carried out by the researcher so that phrasal verbs could be learned and taught in context rather than in isolation in order to reduce the avoidance of phrasal verbs in Pakistani learners.

2.7 Corpus Research

There has been growing interest in the field of corpus linguistics in the past few decades. In corpus linguistics, a corpus (or corpora in the plural form) can be referred to as a principled collection of electronic texts usually stored on a computer available for qualitative and quantitative analysis (O' Keffe, McCarthy, & Carter, 2007). Conrad (1999) discussed three distinct characteristics of corpus-based research. Firstly, corpus-based research uses a principled collection of naturally-occurring texts. Naturally-occurring texts do not only refer to written texts, but also include spoken ones or a mix of both types. Corpora can be gathered and built from various sources, such as academic textbooks, newspapers, magazines, students' work, conference, classrooms, political speeches, TV series, the Internet, etc. Aside from sources of texts, to serve the principled collection purpose, the size and design of the corpus should be emphasized to ensure that the corpus contains good representative samples and proper varieties of texts. Reppen (2010) suggested that there is no specific size of a corpus that fits all studies. Studies of common grammatical features can rely on small-size corpora, while far bigger corpora are required for the research of less common features. Secondly, since corpora comprise a great deal of texts and they are stored on a computer, the corpus-based studies can benefit from the use of computers and specially designed software to analyze the samples from corpora. Many aspects or complex patterns of language can be discovered by using corpus software together with a researcher's judgment. Thirdly, corpus-based studies include both quantitative and qualitative analysis. Quantitative analysis helps to obtain the results, such as the number of occurrences, and the major patterns in any corpora being studied. On the other hand, the function of language or how a word or phrase is used in various situations can be achieved through qualitative analysis.

A corpus based study was conducted by Liao and Fukuya (2004) in which researcher selected 85 students: 15 of them were native undergraduate students whereas 30 were advance level Chinese graduate students in order to know why they avoid using phrasal verbs while the others 40 were Chinese speakers who were the students of intermediate level. The researcher applied three types of test for them i.e. multiple choice, translation and recalling type of tests in which the students' knowledge regarding lexical and figurative meanings were tested. The Chinese students were divided into six groups and were given one test to each group whereas the multiple-choice test was given to native speakers. It was revealed in result that the intermediate learners used one word verbs rather than phrasal verbs because of lacking PV in their L1. However, the students of advance level used more PVs than intermediate. It was further revealed in the tests that advance as well as intermediate students preferred to use literal PVs rather figurative ones. Moreover, the researchers came to know through result of the study that learners avoid using phrasal verbs because of inter-language development, not because of the difference between L1 and L2. It was further dig out that this avoidance occurs because of semantic and syntactic difficulties. To sum up, the researchers came up with the idea that if exposure of L2 is given to learners, the fear of using L2 could be avoided.

Phrasal verbs have been target of study in different corpora recently as Gardner and Davies (2007) have worked on phrasal verbs in British National Corpus. Their findings reveal that the combination of small number of twenty lexical verbs with eight adverbial particles accounts for more than one half of the 518,923 phrasal verbs occurrences in the mega corpus. It was further pointed out those only twenty five phrasal verbs account for nearly one third of all phrasal verbs occurrences in the BNC. Moreover, It is further points out that many form such as “back, out, down, up” occur as particles rather than prepositions. However, “under, by and across” hardly plays a role of particles but mostly as prepositions. In addition to this, pick. Point and carry are usually occurring in combination of phrasal verb rather than lexical verb.

Another corpus study has been carried out in which Trebits (2009) studied the frequency of these combinations in the written documents of the European Union. In the study, the researcher pointed out all the occurrences of the phrasal verbs in the corpus including most frequent and productive lexical verbs and particles forming phrasal verbs. The researcher has come up with a list of the most productive lexical verbs and particles. The researcher identified 130 lexical verbs types as well as 14 particles in a total 1031 PVs constructions. It was further revealed in the study that from the top 50 lexical verbs in the center of excellence in urban education, the following 11 were frequently appeared in function as phrasal verbs constructions such as, “work, take, set, report, put, open, make, go, call, bring, base”.

A corpus-based study was carried out by Akbari (2009) in which he investigated the Malaysian ESL learners' use of phrasal verb combinations. Furthermore, the corpus of the study comprised a number of the secondary level students' narrative compositions sampled from the EMAS corpus. It was revealed in the result that learners used phrasal verbs inaccurately both syntactic as well as semantic use. He further pointed out that phrasal verbs were used by learners which were not specified in curriculum. It was also revealed that learners avoided using idiomatic types of phrasal verbs. The study discussed that obstacles being faced by Malaysian learners, however, the study suffered because of many methodological shortcomings.

Many other studies have been done to analyze the reasons of avoidance of Phrasal verbs among students as Yasuda (2010) in spite of high occurrences of phrasal verbs, learning phrasal verbs has been a complicated area for students. He asserted that it is difficult for Japanese learners to learn phrasal verb because of difference in lexicalizes orientation schemes between English and Japanese as English encodes them in particles whereas they are encoded in verb itself in Japanese Language. The researcher in this study selected 115 English Language students of a private university of Japan; the students were divided into two groups: a control group of 56 students who were taught through root learning whereas the second one was experimental group of 59 students who were taught through cognitive method. The researcher pointed out orientational metaphors could be created through five particles i.e. a) that the particles off can be used for the meaning of protection, cancelling, prevention, departure, stopping and separation, b) the particles down can be used for suppressing, lowering, defeating as well as for the meaning of decreasing, c) the particle up can be used for accessible, visible and completion, d) the particle out can be used for searching, removing, finding and excluding, e) the particle into can be used for changing. It was revealed in result that there was not any difference in their performance. It was further dig out that the experimental group was able to derive the meaning of phrasal verbs through metaphorical thought. The researchers sum up his result by stating that cognitive approach is more important or useful than traditional approach of root learning.

Another corpus based study was conducted by Zarifi and Mukundan(2014) in which they selected five primary level students in order to find out the creativity and unnaturalness in the use of phrasal verbs. The result of the study revealed that Malaysian learners use phrasal verbs as it was found in the study that unusual forms of idiomatic phrasal verbs are created by the Malaysian learners. It was further suggested by the researcher to the teachers and material developers that the material which can unable learners to learn idiomatic phrasal verbs be provided to students.

Following the above all studies, another study has been carried out by Maryam and Jayakaran (2015) entitled “A review on studies of phrasal verbs construction in ESL context” in which the researcher tried to find out theoretical and methodological issues with different studies which were conducted since three decades. The analysis result revealed the developments and paradigm shifts in this era. It was revealed in previous studies that the research findings have not been incorporated into classroom activities and English Language Teaching Materials. However, the study that was carried out by the above mentioned researchers claimed that not sufficient researchers have been conducted on the use of phrasal verbs in ESL Textbook. Therefore, the study recommended that more studies are needed to analyze how phrasal verbs are treated in textbooks which can help material developers to present this important component part of English Grammar (phrasal verbs) more effectively based on research findings.

The following researches have been carried out so far in which they argued that phrasal verbs are avoided because phrasal verbs are complicated and difficult for learners to comprehend.

A review on studies of phrasal verbs construction in ESL context	Maryam & Jayakaran (2015)

(Note: Adopted from Abdulkoneim Mahmoud's work, January 2015, p.2)

It is quite true that many researchers have done research on phrasal verbs i.e. the avoidance of ESL and EFL learners regarding phrasal verbs; frequently used phrasal verbs; semantic features; however, no systematic research has been done so far in Pakistan regarding phrasal verbs in context. This study may broaden the academic horizon of the students on account of phrasal verbs. Students in Pakistan are asked to cram a specific list of phrasal verbs which is forgotten and causes lack of interest in their learning process. Due to replacement of particle, phrasal verbs change their meaning whereas verbs remain same which causes confusion on the part of readers particularly students. Therefore, teaching English through newspaper, in term of phrasal verbs can be more beneficial for students (intermediate, upper intermediate and higher level) in the course of their learning as it provides a context.

Although many studies have examined the complications of phrasal verbs in various angles such as the combination of structures, semantic features, frequently used phrasal verbs, and the avoidance of phrasal verbs among ESL and EFL learners, very little systematic research has been conducted regarding phrasal verbs in context in Pakistan.

The purpose of this study is to broaden the academic horizon of the students on account of phrasal verbs. It will suggest teaching phrasal verbs by teaching English newspaper columns which may be helpful for students in learning process. It may be valuable for educational institutions for selection and inclusion of the daily Dawn in term of teaching/learning phrasal verbs that are frequently used in day to day life. It may also be helpful for the students in preparing the most relevant phrasal verbs of daily life and would learn phrasal verbs more easily in context rather than cramming. It may give them new idea improving their reading and writing skill when they understand idiomatic expression especially phrasal verbs in their academic life. It would, therefore, raise learners' awareness towards the appropriate use of phrasal verbs in various registers or modes of communication. Finally, English language learners can adapt the methodology of this study for future research on other phrasal verbs in the same or different linguistic aspects. This would encourage students to learn English language independently.

2.8 METHODOLOGY

In this part, I have discussed data collection, types of data and the method of data analysis:

2.8.1 Data Collection

Seventy articles written by Cyril Almeida in daily Dawn from November 2012 to November 2013 were selected for the study. The data were put in tables first in order to find out the numbers of phrasal verbs used by the columnists. Moreover, the data were analyzed through close reading and all the phrasal verbs were written in separate sheets.

2.8.2 Types of Date

Articles of one year were selected which has already been mentioned in the above section. The types of data were feature articles which were written by Cyril Almeida on different political and social issues by using phrasal verbs frequently.

2.8.3 Process of Data Collection and Analysis

The data were collected from online website and were downloaded first. They were put in different folders month wise and the date was mentioned on every article. After doing that, all phrasal verbs were written on sheets and shown in tables. Furthermore, data were converted into plain text in order to make them readable for AntConc corpus software.

Additionally, data was analyzed through software AntConc in which all verbs were identified with particles. The most recurrent particles were pointed out and were put in separate sheet according to their categories. The most frequent used particles were, 'up, out, on, in, over, off, with and 'for' were shown in separate section. Apart from keeping the most frequent use of particles in separate section, the data were again uploaded on AntConc software in order to find out the most recurrent verbs with the above mentioned particles. Moreover, these verbs were identified first and the data was selected for further analysis according to frequency.

I selected particles "up", "out" and "on", because of their most frequent use by the writer after analysis; however, the particle 'with' was selected because of its least use. The data were further analyzed and the most frequent verbs with the above mentioned particles were indentified and put into tables. Furthermore, I selected two online dictionaries: online Cambridge dictionary and online dictionary of phrasal verbs in order to find their dictionary meanings. The reason for selection of two online dictionaries was to know diverse meanings of the selected recurrent phrasal verbs as students use online dictionaries nowadays in order to seek meaning of a word. In addition to this, researcher also found out contextual meanings of the target phrasal verbs by doing close reading of the feature articles. In a nutshell, conclusion was drawn in the light of analysis and recommendations were made in the light of findings.

2.9 Chapter Summary

This chapter gives a detail overview of phrasal verbs in different perspectives including its origin and its Complexity. It also gives review of related general research sequential. It also offers overview of corpus research in the area of phrasal verb. In addition, it also gives a short detail of methodology of the present study.

The following chapter deals with data analysis and discussion.

DATA ANALYSIS

This Chapter contains two parts: first part of the analysis in which all recurrent phrasal verbs were identified with the help of corpus software AntConc and in second part of the analysis, top ten phrasal verbs were selected according to their frequency and put in tables in order to find out their dictionary and contextual meanings. Afterwards, researcher has found out their dictionary and contextual meanings. The difference in meanings of the selected dictionaries was discussed and contextual meanings were also drawn by close readings.

3.1 Description of Data

3.1.1 The Particles Used Frequently:

In the tables which are given below, the most frequent phrasal verbs with particle ‘up’ were identified. I found in the analysis that forty one phrasal verbs were used with particle ‘up’ by the columnist in his articles. Of which end up, clean up and pick up, were the most frequent ones. As they are given below:

4.1 Summary

The study was carried out to analyze phrasal verbs in context. The first chapter of the study deals with introduction including statement of the problem, significance of the study, research methodology, chapter division and justification of the study. Second chapter deals with literature review which has two parts. In the first part, general researches, related to phrasal verbs have been discussed whereas the second part contains recent corpus studies and research methodology and Chapter three discusses data analysis. The data analysis has three parts. In first part of analysis, all the recurrent particles were found out with the help of AntConc corpus software, in second part of analysis, the top ten the most frequent phrasal verbs were found out and in third part of the analysis their dictionary and contextual meanings were identified. Chapter four contains findings, conclusion and recommendations. By following research questions a) what are frequently used particles in the selected articles of Cyril Almeida b) what are the most frequent verbs with frequently used particles c) what variations are there between contextual and selected dictionaries meanings; the given findings were drawn:

4.2 Findings

In first phase of the analysis all the particles used frequently by the columnist in his articles of one year, were shown. It was carried out with the help of AntConc corpus software. Through the analysis of this part, it was found that the columnist used 41 phrasal verbs which contain particle 'up', 34 contain particle 'out', 25 phrasal verbs which consist the particle 'on', 17 phrasal verbs were used with particle 'off', 14 phrasal verbs were used with particles 'over' and 'into', whereas 9 with particle 'in', 2 phrasal verbs contain particle 'with' and 1 with particle 'for'.

It was analyzed in the first part that first focus of the columnist was particle 'up' because it has been used 41 times with different phrasal verbs. Second frequently usage was particle 'out' and third one was particle 'on' likewise in sequence, off, over, into, in, with and least the particle 'for' was used. Therefore , the researcher selected the top three particles 'up', 'out' and 'on' including one least used particle ' with' for second of the analysis.

In second phase of the analysis, the researcher again used AntConc in order to know the most frequent verbs which were used with the above top three particles frequently. It was further revealed in second part of the analysis that a) the verb end, pick and clean had been used frequently with particle 'up', b) figure, turn and dole were used frequently with particle 'out' and, c) the verb, focus, take and move were used frequently 'on' and, d) deal was used frequently with particle 'with'.

In the second phase of analysis, the most frequent used phrasal verbs were a) the phrasal verb ' end up' was used 17 times , pick up was used 9 times, whereas clean up has been used 8 times, b) 'figure out' was used 16 times, 'turn out' was used 6 times, and 'dole out' was used 3 times, c) 'focus on' was used 16 times, 'take on' 9 times, and 'move on' was used 8 times, d) 'deal with' was used 19 times in one year articles by columnist.

In third phase of the analysis, I wanted to see the contextual and dictionaries meanings of the most frequent used top 10 phrasal verbs a) end up, pick up, and clean up, b) figure out, turn out and dole out, c) focus on, take on and move on, and d) deal with.

After analysis, the researcher has found the following variation in the given meanings of the both dictionaries i.e. online phrasal verbs dictionary and online Cambridge dictionary. Furthermore, the researcher also identified the contextual meanings used by columnist of the top ten selected phrasal verbs.

- a) The online phrasal verbs dictionary shows the meaning of 'end up' as become or do something unplanned, however, online Cambridge dictionary defines it as 'to finally be in a particular place or situation'. Besides, according to contextual meanings, the columnist used it in the sense of a) Finally to be in a particular position, b) to stop, and c) stop doing something.
- b) The columnist used the phrasal verb 'pick up' in the sense of 'to collect' in his articles, however, online Cambridge dictionary does not show this meaning whereas this meaning is existing in online phrasal dictionary. Furthermore, it was revealed that the columnist has used 'pick up' as contextual meaning of 'to start something again after an interruption', however, online phrasal verbs dictionary does not show this meaning whereas it is existing in online Cambridge dictionary.
- c) The results reveal that the meaning of phrasal verb 'clean up' can be seen as 'tidy and clean as well as profit sometimes suddenly in online phrasal verbs dictionary, however, columnist has used it in the sense of 'to stop something illegal, to clean the system. Whereas one of meaning given by online Cambridge dictionary match the sense in which columnist used it in his articles.
- d) The phrasal verb 'figure out' was used in the sense of 'to find the answer to a problem' in online phrasal verb dictionary whereas online Cambridge dictionary defines it as 'to finally understand something or someone, or find the solution to a problem after a lot of thought'; however, the contextual meaning of 'figure out' was found as ‘to understand’ which matches with the meaning of online Cambridge dictionary but does not match with the meaning shown in online phrasal verbs dictionary and other contextual meaning are: to solve a problem. Find a solution and ‘point out’.

- e) The contextual meanings of the phrasal verb ‘turn out’ are: ‘finally discover, to go, and ‘to stop’ however, online phrasal verb dictionary does not show these meanings whereas meanings in online Cambridge dictionary are slightly similar to contextual meanings in which columnist used it in his article.
- f) The columnist used ‘dole out’ in the sense of ‘to distribute’ his articles, has similarity to the meanings of online Cambridge and phrasal verbs dictionary as both dictionaries have shown the meaning of ‘dole out’ as ‘to distribute’.
- g) It was also found in the analysis that the contextual meaning ‘to concentrate’, in which the columnist used the phrasal verb ‘focus on’ in his articles, is similar to the meanings of online Cambridge and phrasal verbs dictionary.
- h) It was further observed that the columnist used ‘take on’ in the sense of ‘to accept’ which was not seen in both dictionaries which shows that phrasal verbs can easily be comprehended with exact meaning if context is given because sometimes dictionaries does not contain the exact meaning of certain phrasal verbs as it has been mentioned above.
- i) The results further revealed in the analysis that the phrasal verb ‘move on’ was used in the sense of ‘a)Change the subject or your job, b)Make people move from a place by the columnist ;however, online Cambridge dictionary defines it as, a)to leave the place where you are staying and go somewhere else, and b)to start a new activity whereas columnist used it in the sense of 'to change' as well as to leave a place or move so similarity and difference in meanings were found.

- j) The phrasal verb 'deal with' was used by the columnist in the sense of 'to solve a problem, b) to face or talk with someone, c) to meet, d) take action in order to solve a problem, however, online phrasal verbs dictionary defines it as 'Be about, use as a subject matter' which is dissimilar to the contextual meanings in which the columnist used it in his articles. Consequently, the dictionary does not show the meaning for which the columnist used it in his articles.

Conclusion and recommendations are made below in the light of above analysis:

The result of the study shows that the columnist used phrasal verbs frequently in his feature articles in daily Dawn newspaper which is read on daily basis. One can find phrasal verbs related to everyday life in articles which are published in Dawn. In order to understand English newspaper, one should comprehend phrasal verbs properly. Further, English Newspaper; particularly Dawn is read by most of the students in order to prepare current affairs for competitive examination therefore they should have good comprehension level regarding phrasal verbs which are used in articles of English newspapers and books. It has also been found that the columnist used phrasal verbs with particles, 'up', 'out' and 'on' frequently in his feature articles. This study also pointed out the ways phrasal verbs were used in these feature articles. Moreover, the contextual and dictionary meanings of the most frequent phrasal verbs were also pointed out and analyzed. It has been further observed that even the meanings of phrasal verbs vary from one dictionary to the other. The variation in meanings in these online dictionaries could also be problematic for students because online dictionaries are being consulted by the students nowadays in the wake of rapid development in the field of technology and mobile devices.

Therefore, learning and teaching phrasal verbs in context and contextual meanings could be more helpful for students in order to know the exact meaning of phrasal verbs.

4.3 Recommendations

The results of the study reflect that phrasal verbs were frequently used by the columnist in his feature articles. Students avoid reading or writing any piece of writing in which phrasal verbs have been used frequently because a list of phrasal verbs is given to students in Pakistan in order to cram them which has created frustration among learners. It was revealed in the study that even meanings of a phrasal verbs found in one dictionary may not be seen in the others as it was mentioned in analysis and results. It is problematic for students in order to comprehend the exact meaning of phrasal verbs. Consequently, from the findings and conclusion, following recommendations are given for learners particularly students and these could be useful for teachers in order to teach phrasal verbs with context.

1. Students should be informed that English is very rich in the use of Phrasal verbs as a single phrasal verb has multi meanings. Students should be taught that in phrasal verbs, verb remains same whereas particles change. This change of particle could be problematic for them. As it has been given below:
 - a) Take in
 - b) Take off
 - c) Take on

In order to comprehend or understand phrasal verbs, one can take the help of contextual meanings through which the exact meaning of the target phrasal verbs can be achieved.

2. The study revealed that the columnist used phrasal verbs frequently in his feature articles which contain particles, 'up', 'out' and 'on', followed by off, over and into.

It is recommended that the phrasal verbs which contain the above mentioned particles may be focused so that one may understand any piece of writing in which one finds phrasal verbs frequently.

3. Phrasal verbs are used by the columnists in English newspapers in Pakistan in their articles as it has been pointed out in the study so it is recommended that students, particularly, the ones who read articles on daily basis in order to prepare for the paper of current affairs paper for competitive examination, should try to learn phrasal verbs in context rather than isolation, furthermore , it has also been found in the study that meaning of a single phrasal verbs may vary from dictionary to dictionary , the meanings in one dictionary may not be in the other dictionary , Therefore, contextual meaning is more important .
4. It is also recommended that inclusion of any Standard English newspaper, particularly Dawn, in terms of teaching any grammatical point; particularly phrasal verbs may increase the comprehension level of students regarding the exact meanings of phrasal verbs that are used in everyday life. Articles may be given to students in order to find out the contextual meaning of phrasal verbs because an article has its own complete entity.
5. A list of phrasal verbs in isolation should not be given to students because it increases frustration of students which may create lack of interest among students towards their studies as well as in preparation for any competitive examination.
6. Consulting one dictionary in order to know or comprehend the meanings of phrasal verbs may not be sufficient because it is possible that a meaning of phrasal verb may not be the one which is in your dictionary as it has been revealed in result that a meaning that is existing in one dictionary may not be in the other dictionary which may results wrong interpretation of the text and it may causes failure of students in examination because of wrong interpretation therefore contextual meaning should be focused and consulted.

7. Different articles should be given to students in order to use phrasal verbs according to the context which may increase the comprehension level of students or learners. .
8. Students, who read daily Dawn in order to prepare the paper of current affairs, may consult different feature articles in order to comprehend contextual meanings of phrasal verbs because a newspaper gives varieties of phrasal verbs regarding everyday life and most of the social, political, cultural, educational and religious issues are discussed in these articles by writers frequently.
